FAMILY LAW

Rachel has a busy practice representing clients in public and private law matters. She has extensive experience in child arrangement order proceedings and injunctions, including final hearings and fact-finding hearings. Rachel finds that her background in psychological research is frequently of assistance when evaluating expert evidence. Rachel's experience in immigration and criminal law helps her to give the best advice in complex cases, including those where jurisdiction is disputed or where there are parallel proceedings in other courts. Rachel is experienced in working with vulnerable clients and is particularly skilled at explaining complex legal principles in simple terms.

EDUCATION LAW

Rachel welcomes instructions in education cases and is particularly interested in cases concerning Special Educational Needs provision. During her legal training Rachel volunteered with the School Exclusion Project, acting on behalf of parents seeking to challenge decisions to permanently exclude their child.

CIVIL LIBERTIES AND HUMAN RIGHTS

Rachel has successfully represented claimants in civil damages claims for false imprisonment against the Ministry of Justice. She has also succeeded in arguing that such claims should be allocated to the fast track rather than the small claims track due to their nature and importance.

During her pupillage, Rachel appeared in the Crown, Magistrates and Youth courts for trials, bail hearings, sentencing and extradition hearings.

BACKGROUND

Prior to being called to the Bar Rachel worked in social research. Her first job was as a researcher at The Young Foundation, a think tank that supports innovation in the public and charity sector. While at The Young Foundation Rachel worked on projects spanning healthcare, education, social isolation, physical activity and homelessness.

Rachel then took up a role at the Helen Bamber Foundation, a charity that provides integrated care to victims of human rights violations, and which works closely with lawyers in the provision of medico-legal reports. As Research and Evaluation Coordinator, Rachel assisted the executive team to review the charity's model and strategy and helped coordinate and deliver psychological research into the impact of government policies on the charity's refugee and asylum-seeking clients. She also co-authored a systematic review published in BMC Psychiatry looking at the impact of immigration detention on mental health.

Rachel is qualified as a civil and commercial mediator with ADR-ODR International.
